WE NOMINATE

George R. Griffing, John P. Servis, J. Dayton Voorhees, William T. White and David R. Winans, five residents of Princeton whose willingness to accept civic responsibilities is symbolic of the democratic way of life, a way of life that is peculiarly American, a way of life to which this community has made notable contributions over the course of the past 250 years. Next Tuesday two of the above-named will be repudiated at the polls and next Wednesday congratulations will be exchanged as the successful candidates for the Borough Council along with Township Committeeman White, unopposed on the ballot, look forward to three-year terms of service in their respective municipalities.

Drawn from different walks of life and advocating different approaches to the same fundamental issues, the five men constitute a representative cross-section of the citizenry of an academic center located approximately halfway between two of the world's largest metropolises. Their average age is 54, ranging from Griffing's 41 years to White's 68. The quintet's two Democrats, Servis and Winans, are native Princetonians. Voorhees is also a Jerseyite, but lists Camden as his birthplace. Griffing migrated southward from Oyster Bay, Long Island, while White hailed from New Brighton, Pa.

Servis, more than the others, is the independent entrepreneur, who completed his education in local public schools and has since devoted 23 years to developing an extremely successful electrical contracting business. His running-mate on the ticket, Winans, a Princeton University alumnus, commutes between his Boudinot Street home and New York City, where he is an officer in the trust department of the Central Hanover Bank and Trust.

Republican Voorhees, a member of the New Jersey Bar Association and a World War I veteran, upholds the gown side of the "Town and Gown" tradition. He has combined two Council terms with his duties in the University's Department of Politics. Griffing, a newcomer to the Princeton political arena after two decades of residence here, is Estimator for the Matthews Construction Company. On the threshold of his eighth term on the Township Committee, White chairmans the board of a long-established industrial enterprise and helps direct the destinies of both an insurance company and the Princeton Bank and Trust Company.

For keeping first things first by elevating their obligations as citizens above personal interests; for personifying those qualities of character and leadership that voters frequently look for and find too seldom in seekers of public office; for the success they have attained in their chosen fields of endeavor, success that could only have been achieved in a democracy; they are TOWN TOPICS' candidates for

Campaign Highlights. Although men for every important office save that of president of the U.S. are seeking election in New Jersey this year, few campaigns have been quieter. Among the highlights:

The refusal of Albert Hawkes, senior Senator from New Jersey, to pledge support of H. Alexander Smith (apparently because Mr. Smith has constantly voted on the other side of many an issue from Mr. Hawkes, a move that invariably found Mr. Smith making an intelligent decision); the irritation with Congressman Frank Mathews' first term in the House, based primarily on his quite indefensible vote against the British loan; the surging Republican tide which seems sure to sweep Driscoll, Smith and many county G.O.P. candidates into office, nonetheless has party leaders worried that overconfidence has developed and will keep Republicans away from the polls.

In Princeton, few voters look for a Democratic victory; yet last year, virtually none predicted the party's sweep. But in contrast to 1945, there are this fall no clearly defined local issues and when they are lacking, the vote invariably follows the State and national trend.

This community, birthplace of pollsters, watched with interest and amusement as Democratic Club President Edward A. Thorne accused the Department of Politics of sending out its undergraduate members to conduct a survey that

It should be remembered that headache is a symptom, and not a disease. It is nature's semaphore, signaling that the track is not clear.

It's New to Us

Children's Pajamas. The shortage of these essentials in a child's wardrobe is still recent enough to evoke a sigh of relief from any mother when she sees the newly arrived stock at The Little Clothesline on Palmer Square.

They are one-piece blue, peach or pink flannel with an added trouble-saving feature to simplify life for both child and parent: in place of the usual buttoned seat there is staunch but stretching elastic. This one innovation, we feel, can mean the difference between complication and simplicity in the wee small hours of the night. If your child is beyond the need of such simplification, there are also flannel print pajamas with buttoned backs, equally appealing for small sleepers as the solid color models. All are $1.75 a pair.

"Serve-Alls" and "Valve Jigger Spoons." Admittedly gadgets are these bright additions to the list of modern trouble savers, but most of us will remember many a standard household article of the present day that in the beginning was sneered at as "only a gadget."

The "Serve-All" is a silver-plated combination of spoon and spatula made somewhat on the principle of ice tongs, which can be used for serving anything that normally takes a fork, spoon and two hands. The spatula side can be used for some things, the spoon for others, and both together for food such as cold meats, hot biscuits and salads.

The "Valve Jigger Spoon" coordinates the work of home bartenders in intriguing fashion. On the top of the long silver-plated spoon is a jigger, marked from one-half to two ounces, with a bottom that can be released by pressing down on the spoon lightly. This is all you need to start the liquor running down the handle and into your pitcher, making it possible to pour and stir at the same time. At the Wine & Game Shop, 6 Nassau Street.

"Nutti Brittle." If you like nuts or candy, this new confection at Thorne's Drug Store on Nassau Street is for you. If you like both, we can imagine nothing that could please your palate more. Made somewhat like peanut brittle but with the addition of three more of the nut family (pecans, walnuts and almonds), this delicious candy is concocted from cereals, popcorn, corn syrup, molasses, sugar and soya beans blended together to form a healthy and tasty "crunch." Each 10-ounce can is 59 cents.

News of the Theatres

The Playhouse

The Killers (Today, Tomorrow) is a suspense-packed underworld melodrama about two tough gunmen assigned to murder a truck driver. Ernest Hemmingway's story and the acting of Edmond O'Brien and Burt Lancaster make it uniformly good.

No Leave, No Love (Sunday through Wednesday) has Guy Lombardo, Xavier Cugat, The Garcias, the 5-year-old boogie-woogie artist "Sugarchile" Robinson; also Van Johnson. It's a hodge-podge of a story about a Marine who returns home, loses his girl, gets a hotel suite and a fabulous charge account from a radio show. The results are varied but only fair.

The Bachelor's Daughters (Thursday, Friday, Saturday) sends four department store salesgirls off on a spree as they pool their room rents, lease a $300-a-month Long Island mansion, get in and out of many a jam. It's unpretentious and good in spots. With Claire Trevor, Gail Russell and Adolphe Menjou.

The Garden

The Kid from Brooklyn (Today, Tomorrow) is Danny Kaye's comedy about Milquetoast the Milkman, who accidentally knocks out an ace boxer, is rematched against him in a championship bout. Slapstick and mugging dominate a film that isn't bad humor.

The Killers (Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday). See above.

Shadow of a Woman (Thursday, Friday, Saturday) is one of the poorer dime thrillers, told in flashback technique, about a woman (Andrea King) whose husband, a quack doctor, is murdered. The plot and script are distinctly second rate.

Sports in Short

Streak Snapped. Bigger Trenton Catholic paced by a galloping Irishman named Marty Ryan, topped Princeton High, 19-0, last Friday, broke the Little Tigers' four-game skein in two. There was little the Blue and White could do about it.

Saturday, Morrisville, victor over Trenton Catholic earlier this year, is the opposition at Morrisville. After that, Manasquan and Lakewood end the season, with Princeton a good bet each time.

Disappointing Second Half. When Princeton's football team walked off the Palmer Stadium gridiron at half-time Saturday, it was on the long end of a 7-7 score. That is to say, the Tigers had given up a touchdown to a vastly favored Cornell entry, had stormed back to knot the count and had outplayed the Ithacans in every department since early in the game. An upset distinctly seemed in the making.

But the third period was a stand-off, and the fourth saw a wearying, still green Nassau eleven yield a second score to the Big Red, then lack the power to strike back. The Nassau secondary hadn't the know-how to break up the wholly routine Cornell passing attack, and when the chips were down, the line was understandably too tired to make the equalizing touchdown possible.

Princeton's aerial game also bogged down completely in the final half, the Tigers failing to gain a yard overhead in the third and fourth quarters after ranking as the second "passingest" team in the nation. Val Wagner and Carl Liebert, hurried too often, were getting rid of the ball quickly and inaccurately.

But beaten or not, the Orange and Black showed everlasting drive and spirit, left few of its faithful downhearted. As long as Princeton makes the most of the material at hand (and it has done all of that in every game to date), no Nassau follower can be strictly gloomy.

This weekend's clash with Penn, currently ranked third in the nation, holds no hope at all for the Tigers. Behind a line that averages 215 (Tackles Gallagher and Savitsky total just under 500 pounds), the Quakers have a backfield that can run with the best and simultaneously is hailed as the top Penn passing attack in a decade.

The Red and Blue can virtually name its own score, actually will pick a relatively small margin. Reason: it's an open fact that Penn football teams, year in, year out, are currently too good to create harmony in the Ivy League, whose member colleges are constantly torn between the desire to maintain high standards and the natural love of victory.

would benefit Politics Professor J. Dayton Voorhees as he sought reelection to the council. Both sides seemed satisfied: Mr. Thorne's horseplay and bid for publicity was dignified with a denial, and the clarity of the denial apparently appealed to the Republicans.

Then the G.O.P. Club came up with a straw vote. It announced that postcards mailed to a fifth of the electorate showed 90 per cent backed the "Byrnes-Vandenbergh" bipartisan foreign policy, that 95 per cent felt all candidates seeking public office should take a stand on labor legislation.

The club further asserted it was asking whether voters think that rental housing for the lowest income group can be provided without subsidy. Finally, it reported it was posing the question, "Do you believe a local administration made up of Democrats can disassociate itself from the policy of the New Deal?" Not ready to release for publication the results on this issue, the Republicans apparently were content to ride with the clear implication phrased in the question itself.

Miscellany. The general alarm Saturday night sounded for the barn owned by Leland G. Birch in the rear of 30 Spruce Street. The two-story structure burned to the ground, with Chief John W. Stalker discarding theories of incendiarism.

An exhibition of recent portraits by Peter Cook of Kingston, to be shown at the Present Day Club from November 6 to 30, will include paintings of Mrs. Edward F. Myers, Mrs. Roger B. Kirkpatrick, Miss Leslie Van Zandt, A. Monroe Wade, and several members of the artist's family . . . the exhibition, Mr. Cook's first one-man show, will be on view daily except Sunday.

Charles Bell of the University Department of English, will give the second of a series of readings this Friday night at the Parnassus Book Shop at 3:30 on the poems of Gerard M. Hopkins.

Contributions to the Princeton Community Chest now stand at $52,552, about 60 per cent of the $87,750 quota.
